The programme of studies at the Doctoral School of Social Sciences is highly customized, adapted to the interests and research projects of the individual doctoral students and conducted under the guidance of a selected supervisor or supervisiors. The duration of the programme is eight semesters. The doctoral students complete compulsory general university classes, classes referring to the broadly conceived scholar's workshop in social sciences and methodological classes. The choice of the courses is not limited to those offered by the doctoral student's own discipline. Doctoral students may choose courses held by lecturers representing other related social sciences disciplines, if they consider it beneficial. Another important part of the program is the School's Seminar, which provides an opportunity to learn about research beyond the framework of a single discipline, and the meetings within which are devoted to presentations given by prominent representatives of the social sciences from UW, Poland and abroad.

Education

The programme of study

The education lasts 4 years. It includes obligatory classes (no more than 300 hours in total during the whole period of education) and the implementation of an individual research plan, carried out under the supervision of a supervisor. The start of education – 1 October 2021.
